

Making Space for Wildlife

On 3rd February, the Start Bay Centre at Slapton, South Devon, ran a session called Making Space for Wildlife. Led by tutor Emma Parr-Ferris, learners made a 'bug hotel' intended to attract wildlife to a garden. Said learner Linda Lardner: 'It was nice to gain more ideas about things to do in the outside environment, and to make something useful. We used wooden pallets and bamboo for the basic construction, and filled in the crevices with old plant pots and soil. I also made a mini version, which I've brought home with me and is now hanging from a tree in the garden – I hope attracting wildlife right now!'
